INTRODUCTION

As the students were novice writers, writing well is truly a big task even for native students moreover nonnative students. Generally, a big problem for the students, as English as a Foreign Language (EFL) learners. They currently have very tiny interest in writing, yet it is so essential to fulfil the education necessities. This may be due to their disappointment to express themselves well in writing may conduct losing of inspiration (Muslim, 2014; Abderraouf, A., 2016). Subsequently, they needed writing strategy to start to write their news writing.

The important and great influences which impact on language is the process of writing. There are many variations on process approaches, and it is recognized some stages of writing, involving pre-writing, drafting, giving, and receiving feedback, and revising. Writing teachers need a variety of strategies to help students their initial anxiety, begin their planning out their ideas, and start writing (Weigle, 2014). This planning, or prewriting, provides the writer more opportunity to consider and reconsider not only the meaning of the message written but also the language used to convey that message. Writers get targets by beginning with a plan. These plans lead the writer from where they presently are in the writing process, to where the writer needs to be when the piece is completed. The plans, in order, aid student writers in developing a definite message which is able to be communicated within their writing (Servati, 2012).

The phases of writing process are prewriting, drafting, writing (first draft), response, revising, editing, post writing, and evaluating. Then, Weigle (2014) defined prewriting as structured activities to provide motivation, content, fluency, and language practice such as structured language practice, readings, films, discussions, brainstorming, webbing, outlining (p. 227). Any kind of approach is taken in writing proses, the teacher writing must consider what kind of activities which might be eloquent to students. And this is a key principle in arranging for writing (Whittaker, 2005). Furthermore, prewriting activities suggest students with something to write. It can produce ideas, encourage thought and help students to find out both what they want to write and how to write it on paper. Those activities can be done in pairs, groups or individuals work. Various examples of prewriting activities: brainstorming, debating, interviewing, use of pictures, outlining, lecturing or oral reading (Dwivedi & Chakravarthy, 2015).

Writing tasks connected to English as Second Language (ESL) or EFL may boost a process of cognitive transfer. They can serve as the replications that augment the progress of academic discourse and enable cognitive exercises to rearrange the obtained new experience for meaning building, topic invention (Liu, 2012). Thus, the researchers proposed an EFL writing instruction on students writing a biography/feature news task as a model to show the teaching procedure by interviewing as the prewriting process.

METHOD

This study is narrative inquiry research which is to proposed autobiography experience for teaching EFL. Writing using prewriting strategy: interviewing before the students (novice writers) created their news story writing: a biography/feature news. The setting of this study is in private University in Indonesia, Banten, Tangerang city. Prewriting activities used which proposed Student Center Learning (SCL) such as technique of hunting news before EFL students start to write their news writing. These hunting news is prewriting activities based on content-related activities. The activities presented here give further experiences for the students as news gatherers. Each activity can be used to help students create portions of the newspaper. The writing teacher may design the activities which meet your students’ needs by considering the students level.

FINDINGS & DISCUSSION

This instruction combines the theory of writing. Practices were dominant in their learning activity in the lectures as the writer employed Student-Centered Learning (SCL) Approach in her teaching which students are responsible for certain activities as planning learning, interacting with teachers and other students, researching, and assessing their learning (Canon, 2000).

Utilizing these prewriting activities, the students get sources of ideas as their news gathering, which starts from several activities such as Interviewing. After they got content, ideas, of what news that they wanted to write, then they wrote their first draft by developing the ideas into main sentence and its supporting sentences, then they wrote them as paragraphs: a biography/feature news.

Designing Teaching EFL Writing: News Story Using Prewriting Activities by Interviewing

The writing teacher taught basic news writing techniques, how the format of news writing structure: those are headline, byline, lead, quote, and conclusion of the writing, by using the news articles (The Jakarta Post, 2018) as models. Then, they were asked to identify the lead, headline, byline, quote, and the types of news writing such as news story: a biography/feature news with a writing caption. And finally, they could produce their own news writing used those format of news writing initiated by prewriting activities based on content-related activities.
